	In the time of the Derg government: "Italy decided to make a major investment in the largest of all the resettlement projects at Pawe in the Gojjam Metekel to which 125,000 people were transported. Many died and the site became a target of harassment by EPRP remnants operating in the area. In spite of heavy investment of Italian money and man power over several years, it remained an unsuccessful experiment." [P B Henze, Layers of time, London 2000 p 309]
	According to statistics of the Relief & Rehabilitation Commission 16,425 individuals had been moved from inside Gojjam to Pawe by the beginning of 1986.

	A great number of refugee children from Sudan started coming to Pignudo in 1987 and by 1989 there were around 18,000 in ages up to 18 years, most of them without their parents present. Swedish Save the Children assisted the camp. They photographed each child and tried to reunite them with their families. [Barnen och vi (Sweden) 1990 no 4 p 10]

	30 km down the river from Gambela the American Presbyterian Mission station "is an interesting stop. Here the Anuak peoples find schooling and opportunity to learn useful handicrafts in addition to medical and spiritual solace. Pokwo has its own airstrip for light aircraft." [Welcome to Ethiopia, A.A. circa 1965 p 101] The Red Cross "supervised" the health services at the mission station (-1971-).
