Linguists who have studied inscriptions assume the presence of actual Sabaeans in Ethiopia at Yeha. The ancient name Ava (Awa) read on inscriptions is "doubtless connected with the Sabaean worship of Baal-Ava -- the Sabaean tribe which had Ava for a capital were known by the Greeks as people who took refuge in caves." [J T Bent 1893]

The temple at Yeha is finely cut of local material, more recently described as silicified sandstone. It is Ethiopia's oldest surviving building.

There is a huge amount of terracing in the area, some of it of old date.

The ancient temple is extremely well preserved, with up to fifty-two courses of masonry.

Some 300 m away from the temple are giant square stone pillars now known as Grat Be'al Guebri.

Yeha lies 5 km north of the main road.

Immediately beside the temple is a modern church dedicated to Abune Aftse.

Dalle is the Oromo name, which the Italians preferred to use. The Italians wrote in 1940: "The construction of a dignified mosque in Dalle has been made possible by a government contribution." Yirga Alem in 1949 was a town with tall eucalyptus trees along the main street. Order had already been given that all roofs along the main street must be of sheet metal, because of the danger of fire. A telephone landline between Yirga Alem and Addis Abeba was completed in late 1960. The Emperor inaugurated the Norway-assisted hospital on 14 March 1968, and by then it was said to have 120 beds.	06/38	[Gz Po WO Gu]
